MASTER MESSAGE

The Hourglass

Behold how swiftly the sands run and how rapidly our lives are drawing to a close...

It amazes me how quickly the time passes. I am only 33 years old and already each week feels as if it left me more quickly than the last. This year has been the fastest, most trying and yet most rewarding of my life.

Watching the hourglass reminds me of how slow time may seem to move during duress, and yet when we choose to view to our many treasures of life, then it is almost imperceptible how fast its sands actually run.

I believe the trick is to not take time for granted. Any of it. Do not try to wish it away or plead with it to move faster to get to some goal. Instead embrace each fleeting moment.

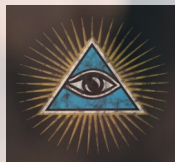

There is only one true finite resource in our existence, and that is our own time. I cannot think of any better reason than to live your life fully right now. Enjoy the moment. Grow with your loved ones. Seek enjoyment in your hobbies, bathe in the delight of music, bond with your Brothers and do whatever else your heart feels gives you true value with your time.

Make it not a chore, but a goal to fully live each moment.

Thus, I close on the wonderful thought of time, its value, beauty and knack of escaping from us so quickly. Make the most of it. Remind the people around you that you love them and never, never, never forget to live.

...As the sands of life, whether slowly or rapidly, will surely ebb away.

G. Daniel Lukowiak
Worshipful Master
